Introduction

Knowing how a scale score translates into a percentile value and vice versa can be useful for setting student realistic goals, getting a deeper insight into a student's absolute and relative performance, estimating a timeframe within which an important milestone can be achieved. For example, you may want to get an answer to the following questions

- How will my student's relative performance degrade over time if no progress is made?
- How many scale score points does the student need to gain to get the next tier recommendation?
- Is a student at risk of sliding over time into a lower tier recommendation?
- What should the student's next performance goal be, and which skill has the top priority?
- How long before the student catches up with peers on a relative basis?

Charts

The charts below give an idea of how a percentile changes as a function of a student's grade level.

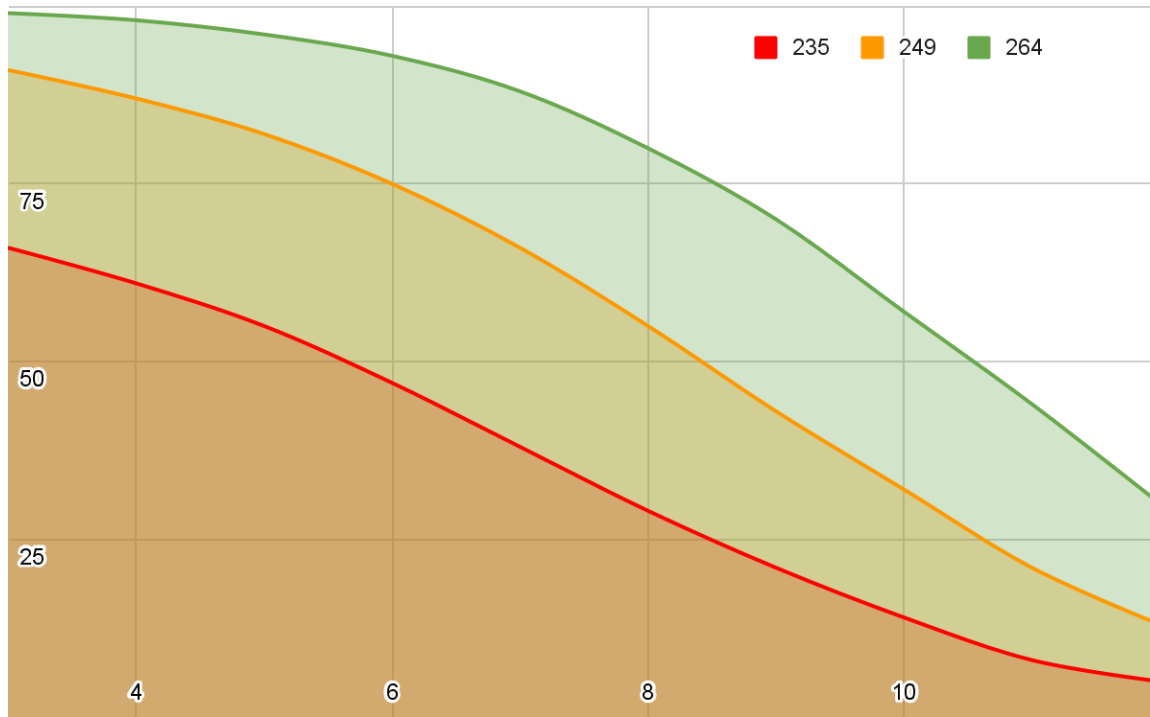

- Axis: Y: percentile (1-99); X: grade level (3-12)
- Lines:
 - Red line - change of percentile for scale score of 235 (area below: scores <235), which represents the range of scores associated with Weak performance.
 - Orange line - change of percentile for scale score 249 (area below: scores <249), which represents the range of scores associated with Low-Medium performance.
 - Green line - change of percentile for scale score 264 (area below: scores <264), which represents the range of scores associated with High-Medium performance.
 - The remaining white area of the chart represents all the scores above 264, which represents the range of scores associated with Strong performance.

Tables

The tables below provide a more detailed look at the relationship between scale scores and percentiles.

- Header: student's grade level
- Left column: student's scale score
 - Red - Weak performance, scores below 235
 - Orange - Low-Medium performance, scores 235-249
 - Green - High-Medium performance, scores 250-264
 - Blue - Strong performance, scores above 264
- Percentiles
 - Red - 10th percentile and below, RTI Tier 3 recommendation
 - Orange - 25th percentile and below, RTI Tier 2 recommendation
 - Light green - 98th percentile and below, RTI Tier 1 recommendation
 - Dark green - 99th percentile, RTI Tier 1 recommendation
